AMERICA IS CHANGING— AND SO IS TELEVISION

Revolutionary shifts in the way we live will affect what we watch—and why

By Neil Hickey

The times they are a-changin'. And so is the television-viewing public. Radical shifts are going on right before our eyes in the makeup and habits of American families. "Population, households and family structure have been changing in truly revolutionary proportions and are more than likely to continue to do so," says a new survey by the Harvard/MIT Joint Center for Urban Studies.

Other researchers are unanimous in their agreement. Social scientists and statisticians employed full time by television networks and advertising agencies are busy clocking, metering, measuring, calibrating and assessing how the character of American society will change by 1990, and what that means for the content of television programming and advertising.

In simplest outline, Americans will be older, better educated and more affluent. There'll be fewer of them per household, and they'll have fewer children. They'll marry later, or not at all. Many will migrate to the Southern and Western states, and even back into the Nation's big cities. Working women will be a larger and larger part of the labor force. Age-old sex roles will be blurred, and so will long-standing distinctions between white-collar and blue-collar workers.

Says one researcher: "The romantic ideal of an American family life as it existed in the post-World War II period —early marriage with stable households and teen-age children living at home—will be far less a reality in 1990 and beyond than it is now." Put another way, the typical family in 1990 will be smaller, there will be more single-person households as people defer marriage, and there will be more single-parent households as more people forsake marriage.

Exactly what that means for television, nobody is 100-percent sure. What is known is that the medium customarily mirrors the society around it, and if the essential character of the society changes, the content of television programming and advertising is bound to follow. Take the subject of working women, for example. In 1970 there were 31.5 million of them, today there are 44.8 million and in 1990 there'll be about 54.3 million, or more than half of all women. One estimate has it that by 1990 fully 70-80 per cent of women in their 20s, 30s and 40s will be out there holding down jobs.

The "revolution yet to come" is what the Harvard/MIT study calls this impending shift in women's habits, and it says their labors will "trigger important changes in the consumption, time use and mobility patterns" of American families. Such as? Well, for starters, many of today's women who spend their leisure hours watching soap operas will be working outside the home, and daytime TV may become the province of retirees and shut-ins.

Besides, that second paycheck will create more disposable income, some of which will be spent on convenience products, because neither husband nor wife will have much time to prepare meals. Husbands will be doing more household chores than ever before. Women will seek more recreational outlets than they do now—boating, camping, hiking—and they will have earned them. And when they come home from work, tired, and plop down before the TV set, they'll expect to see women portrayed realistically—as full, working partners in the life of the home. In other words, the old Father Knows Best-type situation comedy will be as incomprehensible to them as a Japanese Noh play.

demographic shifts that will affect how broadcasters relate to the public. Others may be even more telling. For example, it will come as good news to many that the "youthquake"—the dominance in the society of youthful values and ethos—is definitely on the slide. Americans are getting older on the average as the children of the post-World War II "baby boom" enter young adulthood. By the year 2000, the largest five-year bracket of the population will be the 40- to 44-year-olds (at present, it's the 20-24 group). The median age of the population (now 30) will be 35 years of age.

One network, ABC, has compiled figures that illustrate graphically this aging of Americans. Between 1970 and 1990, says ABC: children 6-11 will have dipped from 12 per cent of the population all the way down to 9 per cent; the 12-17s will decline from 12 to 8 per cent; the 18-24s will slip from 12 to 10 per cent. Meanwhile, the 25-34s will jump from 12 to 17 per cent; the 35-49s will rise from 17 to 21 per cent; and folks over 65 will increase from 10 to 12 per cent.

CBS this year is suggesting to advertisers that, for the decade ahead, they de-emphasize their traditional hot pursuit of 18-49s in favor of courting the 25-54 segment of the population. The 18-24 age bracket, especially, says CBS in an internal sales document, "represents little potential to the marketer of most products and services. This segment of the population will decline as a per cent of the population during the 1980s," and its share of discretionary income will fall as well.

Thus, what many have perceived in the last 20 years as the tyranny of youthful values—rock music, long hair, ubiquitous jeans—will be far less a factor in the next decade, and TV programmers and advertisers will reflect the change in their appeals to audiences. "A declining proportion of all households will have young children present," says the Harvard/MIT study. "By 1990, we expect only half of all husband/wife couples to have children under the age of 15 living at home." And a remarkable 60 million households—almost two-thirds of the expected 90-odd million households of 1990—will, for one reason or other, have no children at all.

So how do you relate to that if you're a television executive? Well, you will favor programs that appeal to a more mature viewership, obviously. You will adjust your aim to hit the fat viewing center of the American audience. Certain program forms traditionally have "skewed older," as the statisticians put it—news, variety shows, sports, Westerns, programs with rural settings—while others (science-fiction, action-adventure, sexually oriented situation comedies) "skew younger." So you will tilt your schedule toward the former, sweetening it with telefilms on serious, contemporary themes and adding some documentaries on subjects of major public concern.

We may already be seeing—in the expanded menu of news programs now on the air—the TV networks' early response to an incipient maturation of public taste: late-night news shows, prime-time news "minutes," magazine shows. "There's a voracious appetite out there for news and informational programming," says ABC's Marvin Mord, boss of that network's research and statistical department. "Television is responding to some more mature need of the public. People now realize that the world is getting smaller and that news has a clear and precise impact on their lives." That probably means hour-long network nightly news programs in the next decade, and maybe network news in prime time (9 or 10 P.M.) as well.

In sum, American society will be measurably more diverse in 1990 than it is now. No one arrangement will → be "typical," says the Harvard/MIT study, and that fact will lead to demands for a wide range of housing, consumer goods, services and entertainment. People will have more varied experiences as they move through life; they'll spend fewer years in conventional nuclear families and more years living apart from close relatives. They'll have "more complicated histories and probably more complicated sets of relationships from one stage of life to another."

As a result, most people will tolerate life styles far different from their own, and will expect to see them dramatized on television: unmarried couples living together; unmarried working women heading their own households; more and more husbands doing housecleaning, cooking, child-rearing and food-shopping.

In spite of all the changes that social scientists unanimously agree are imminent, the handful of top network executives who actually decide what gets on the air spend very little time agonizing about them. Their energies are almost totally absorbed by the life-and-death struggle over who'll be No. 1 in the ratings next week—not 10 years from now. Nothing wrong with that, says Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for research projects, whose job is to keep tabs on what the American public is thinking and doing and to interpret the mountains of data he collects for his bosses.

"Television programming, unlike the automobile industry, is a short-term-planning business," Jaffe points out. "It has a quick response time. We can jump on a trend very quickly and prepare programs that will be on the air in a matter of months."

Television customarily reacts more to fashions and trends, says Jaffe, than to demographic changes, which tend to be glacially slow. Still, the networks' huge research departments keep an eagle eye on the public to gauge its long-term needs and preferences. Their strategy: don't lead public taste, but don't lag behind it much, either.

Peculiarly, the society is becoming more diverse at the same historical moment that the means of distributing TV entertainment and information are becoming more numerous, and those two factors are bound to reinforce one another, say the experts. Greater affluence (thanks partly to smaller households and two-paycheck families) will result in more disposable income, and thus more cable TV, pay-TV,videodiscs, videotext and the whole range of new electronic gadgets in the home. Consequently, programmers and advertisers will be able to locate more accurately than ever before the specific demographic audience segments they want to reach—and then go ahead and create shows and commercials specifically for them.

That's already happening. The Cinemerica Satellite Network, for example, a cable-TV service aimed at viewers over 45, is scheduled to begin broadcasting early in 1981. The 24-hour Cable News Network feeds the aforementioned mature yen for news and information programming; and so does C-Span, which broadcasts the proceedings of the House of Representatives.

"If we want to reach a younger couple just starting a new household—or any other demographic segment—we can do it with these new delivery systems," says Dr. Theodore F. Dunn, senior vice president of the Benton & Bowles ad agency. That evolution from "broadcasting" to "narrowcasting" will meld gracefully with the new diversity of the American public.

The times, indeed, are a-changin'. Napoleon had it right: "One must change one's tactics every 10 years if one wishes to maintain one's superiority," he said.

That fellow should have been a television programmer. (END)

It's a Cotton-pickin' shame

The once proud Cotton Bowl now has to lure college teams with Texas belles and 10-gallon hats

By Melvin Durslag

Sponsors of that venerable Dallas drama, the Cotton Bowl game, don't disguise their problems. To begin with, their event is staged in a 60-year-old stadium, abandoned, for the most part, by all except the principals in the New Year's Day match and by Texas and Oklahoma, who engage in their annual throat-cut on the neutral battleground of that arena.

Southern Methodist and the Dallas Cowboys used to inhabit the Cotton Bowl, but have since fled to the cultural purlieus of nearby Irving, which isn't your most common Texas name.

Then, placed in the same time slot on New Year's afternoon as the Sugar Bowl, the Cotton Bowl encounters a diluted TV audience, split between the two games. While the Rose Bowl does a single, starting at 5 P.M. (ET) and the Orange Bowl comes off in prime time at 8, the Cotton and Sugar, beginning in the early afternoon, arm-wrestle for ratings to the detriment of both.

For a while, the Sugar Bowl shifted to New Year's Eve, giving all four major postseason games unimpeded sailing on television. But bowl sponsors in New Orleans ran afoul of local commerce, which complained that football on that ribald evening loused up business. Now back on New Year's afternoon, opposite the Cotton Bowl, the Sugar Bowl enjoys a slight edge.

"Since ABC, which televises the Sugar Bowl, also does college football during the year," says Kevin O'Malley, vice president of program planning and development for CBS Sports, which has carried the Cotton Bowl the last 23 years, "it has the power to offer a → regular-season appearance as an incentive to a team it may be seeking on New Year's Day. When Pitt was No. 1 in the Nation in 1976, it was wildly solicited by bowl sponsors. ABC managed to shoehorn its game with West Virginia into the schedule that year, and when Jan. 1 rolled around, Pitt was in the Sugar Bowl."

Among the four major bowls, only the Rose is spared the pain of having to enter the dogfight for New Year's Day teams. It is locked in with the Pacific-10 and Big Ten. The Cotton, Sugar and Orange Bowls invite the Southwest, Southeastern and Big Eight champions, respectively, as home teams, then try to outwit each other for the most interesting opponents.

"Since we can't offer palm trees, like Pasadena and Miami," says Jim Brock, the Cotton Bowl's executive vice president, "and can't match the excitement of the New Orleans French Quarter, we have to play our strong suits in Dallas. We offer money—more than any other bowl except the Rose. We also find that visiting players love to be entertained Texas-style. We take them to a dude ranch, put them on horses and give them cowboy hats. We throw in a Texas barbecue and country music. And if the players happen to become friends with our beautiful Dallas women, I guess that's a break for us, too."

According to Brock, Alabama, the prince of postseason, appearing in bowl games for the last 21 years in a row, is one of the few schools not lured by money. "If your bowl features the No. 1 team in the polls," says Brock, "and Alabama wants the national title, it will come to your game. National titles mean more to Bear Bryant than money." Conversely, if Alabama is No. 1—and wants to stay that way—it may pick your bowl game if it spots a soft touch.

Completed in 1921 as Fair Park Stadium, the structure became known as the Cotton Bowl in 1937, when a Dallas oil man, the late J. Curtis Sanford, put together a nonprofit association whose purpose was to promote an annual New Year's game.

"For a long spell," says Kevin O'Malley of CBS, "the Cotton Bowl was the highest-rated bowl on TV next to the Rose. Now we're embattled. The Orange Bowl, unopposed at night, is rated second. And our game slugs it out with the Sugar Bowl for No. 3."

The Cotton Bowl remains highly profitable, but its neighbor in Houston, the Bluebonnet Bowl, feels that the Cotton and all the others in the postseason dodge would be better off with a national tournament involving the four major bowls and several satellites.

"The Cotton and Orange Bowls have problems they don't realize," says Tex Thornton, executive director of the Bluebonnet. "Because of aging stadiums in Dallas and Miami, their games could slip from major status to minor. A tournament would pump up interest. It also would eliminate the fights now taking place among the bowls to recruit teams."

Jim Brock sees no immediate slippage at the Cotton Bowl but reveals that two ideas have been seriously discussed among Cotton, Sugar and Orange Bowl leaders to inject carbonation into their events.

"First," he says, "thought has been given to rotating the Southwest, Southeastern and Big Eight champions among the three games. They would take turns as host teams, instead of being anchored in one place.

"The second idea involves a sudden-death plan. When a game ends in a tie, each team would have the opportunity in overtime to put the ball into play at the opponent's 15-yard line. The one scoring the most points would be the winner."

Unmistakably, the tie-breaking concept is appealing, especially to TV viewers, who can't be entertained Texas-style with barbecues, country music and cowboy hats. END

TOO CLOSE FOR COMFORT

I have made a few snorting references to "jiggle comedies" on this page, and apparently I've given the impression that I am constitutionally anti-jiggle.

Actually I have great respect for jiggles as an art form. I have tuned out of many a television show, but never during a jiggle. No television comedy was ever ruined by a cute girl in tight clothes, and some may have been saved. But some poorly constructed current series seem to be going by the motto: if you can't get laughs, try for heavy breathing.

I won't put Too Close for Comfort in that category. This new ABC effort doesn't rely entirely on Lydia Cornell's nubile charms. Ted Knight and Nancy Dussault are the stars and carry most of the dialogue. But the producers find a way to bounce Miss Cornell across the screen every few minutes, usually in short-shorts and a tight sweater. Call it an insurance policy.

Knight's and Dussault's San Francisco household is set into agitation when their two attractive daughters move downstairs into their own apartment, to daddy's horror. Daughter Jackie (Deborah Van Valkenburgh) is 21, brunette and sensible. Sara (Miss Cornell) is blonde, built and inclined to bounce when happy. Also when unhappy. Friction arises between the girls when Jackie's boy friends catch sight of Sara. "When it comes to personality, you're a 36C," Jackie snaps.

Dussault and Knight drop into their wry-wife and hysterical-husband roles a bit too patly, but they play well together and both can deliver a line. When she reminded him that he had to get to work and pay the bills, he lamented. "I'm 51 years old—shouldn't they be paid by now?" The sex jokes are more strained, as when they found a remote-control TV clicker in bed. "I thought it was you," piped Dussault. And the storylines reek of contrivance. In one episode, Knight hired a pair of ex-convicts to plaster a wall on the same day that Jackie brought home $100,000 from her bank job, "because the armored-car drivers are on strike."

Knight is using most of the mannerisms of Ted Baxter, his Mary Tyler Moore character, and I guess he's entitled to borrow from his own creation. But we can't help recalling how much funnier he was in that sublimely crafted show, where the comedy rose out of the characters instead of falling through the transom in the forms of ex-cons and bags of money.

I don't want to focus too intently on this jiggle business (very bad for the blood pressure), but I should acknowledge that the fad for girls in sweaters does pose some challenges for the writers of Too Close for Comfort. First you have to give your sweatered character something to be angry about (so she can pout, stamp her foot or flounce out in a huff—all actions that promote healthy jiggling) or to be happy about (for clapping of hands, leaps of joy, wiggles of ecstasy).

So far the writers are coming through with plausible excuses, and Miss Cornell is jiggling with conviction. The next problem is to get some bounce into the rest of the show. END

Money Squeeze Causing Cutbacks In Network News

Washington—"We've always been a recession-resistant industry," says James H. Rosenfield, president of the CBS Television Network. "But this year, it's hit us." Rosenfield estimates that the income of the three commercial networks dropped four to five per cent—"tens of millions of dollars"—during the fourth quarter of 1980 because of the actors' strike and the Nation's dismal economic picture. Not since 1970 has the television industry shown such a one-quarter decline.

The money squeeze is expected to affect all divisions of all three networks. But one area that may be especially hard hit is news. "We're going to be operating very close to the bone," says CBS News president Bill Leonard. "Inflation has killed us."

CBS News will be cutting back. Says Robert Chandler, CBS News's vice president/director, public affairs, "We'll have fewer originals and more repeats." CBS News's Magazine, sources say, will be cut from eight to six original shows. Other, occasional programs such as Your Turn: Letters to CBS News will be axed altogether. Leonard calls such cutbacks "temporary." But Leonard is faced with the unenviable duty of having to trim a reported eight to 10 per cent from CBS News's budget of approximately $155-million. "And you know he's not going to touch the Evening News," says one Washington staffer.

At NBC News, one insider says, "It's common knowledge that there'll be cutbacks. The losses we suffered by not carrying the Moscow Olympics, as well as the fact that our entertainment shows are running last, mean we're not bringing in much money." (Indeed, network sources in New York estimate that NBC brings in only about half the dollars per commercial that its competitors get.) Says an NBC veteran in Washington: "The correspondents have been told not to look for raises in 1981."

ABC News president Roone Arledge says his news budget for 1981 will be larger than it was for 1980. But network sources report that ABC is spending about $138 to $145 million on news, less than either CBS or NBC. And despite Arledge's high standing with the chiefs of his network, Richard C. Wald, ABC News senior vice president, reports that the expansion budget for news has been reduced. Another ABC insider complains: "They've cut the Christmas party."

Network correspondents in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip may have a harder time filming disturbances there in the future. The Israeli military has issued new regulations that authorize the confiscation of videotapes if newsmen cover scenes deemed inflammatory or otherwise unacceptable. The West Bank commander, Maj. Gen. Danny Matt, was recently incensed by the way foreign TV handled incidents in which several Arab youngsters were shot by Israeli troops in the town of Ramallah. The Israeli military is said to feel that TV cameras excite protesters into more serious actions than they would take if

As We See It

☐ A reader in South Burlington, Vt., has sent us a letter expressing some thoughts that we have heard from many people in other parts of the country as well. He writes:

"I think it is of paramount importance that the proper usage of the English language be mandatory on any television broadcast. It is disheartening to note the lack of grammar skills in today's youths, the terrible example of grammar usage set by television, and the amount of time the average young person devotes to television watching. I'm certain that there is a correlation of these factors.

☐ "Certainly your publication is in a unique position to lead a campaign to elevate the standards of the language used on television. I hope that you acknowledge the problem and are able to find means of helping solve it. . . ."

Yes, we do acknowledge the problem. We fully agree that television too often sets a terrible example in its usage of the English language. We have published many articles and editorials deploring the careless and imprecise English heard on television.

☐ Solving the problem, however, is much more difficult than acknowledging it. The level of literacy in America is determined outside the borders of the television screen—in our schools and in our homes. Television is a reflection of our society, and until that society starts doing a better job of inculcating proper language skills in young people, some of those young people will, as adults, become television performers who habitually mangle the language. And their corrupted version of our mother tongue will be passed along to yet another generation of viewers.

There is no way we, or anybody else, can make proper language usage "mandatory." Only when we as a society start watching our language more carefully will we also be able to watch television without fear of exposure to shoddy grammar and usage.

TORTILLAS IN THE DAIRY CASE

The Screening Room

Previews of noteworthy series and specials by TV GUIDE programming editors. For movie choices, see 'This Week's Movies,' by Judith Crist, in this section.

TV ushers in 1981 with the traditional parades and bowl games, of course. But a quartet of noteworthy documentaries and a salute to some giants of American culture provide the week's most provocative viewing.

SATURDAY. A black-tie affair telecast from the elegant Kennedy Center Opera House in Washington, D.C., The Kennedy Center Honors (9 CBS) pays homage to five Americans who have enriched the Nation's culture: Leonard Bernstein, James Cagney, Agnes de Mille, Lynn Fontanne and Leontyne Price. Yes, some praise on-stage flows from speeches, but the accent is on entertainment, a sophisticated montage from opera, the dance, Broadway and Hollywood . . . An NBC White Paper (9:30 P.M.) examines how casinos, state and local governments, and possibly organized crime have cashed in on legalized "Gambling." Filmed in Atlantic City, N.J., and Las Vegas, the report also shows how gaming (as Wall Street euphemistically calls the industry) generates ruin as well as revenue. "I always owed the rent; I always owed everything," says a member of Gamblers Anonymous, who—with other members of the group—talks poignantly of his compulsion . . . "[Act] strong, don't cry, [be] brave." That, "above anything else," says one veteran, is how policemen are supposed to behave. And yet, as reported in "The Shattered Badge," an ABC News Closeup (10 P.M.), cops suffer some of the highest rates of divorce, alcoholism and suicide in the Nation. On-the-job violence and inner-city racial tensions are some of the contributing factors considered here. And a refusal to recognize the psychological dangers of police work may only worsen the statistics.

MONDAY. An innovative episode of M*A*S*H (9 CBS) condenses one wasted year of war—1951—into a cleverly written half hour replete with subplots. The best of them deals with a baseball wager on that season's National League pennant race.

TUESDAY. A second ABC News Closeup this week (10 P.M.) finds Jamaica to be not the island paradise of the TV commercials and travel brochures, but rather an impoverished Third World nation reeling from major food shortages, a 30-per-cent inflation rate and a political schism between left and right that frequently erupts into violence.

THURSDAY. Every year, claim Angelenos, thousands migrate to Southern California after viewing a two-and-one-half-hour advertisement for its sunny climate—the annual Tournament of Roses Parade (11:30 A.M. CBS and NBC), a grand spectacle of floats, flowers and marching bands . . . "Space Shuttle: The Long Countdown," a CBS Reports (10 P.M.), traces the troubled 10-year history of the NASA project to send reusable spacecraft into orbit. While the first of them, Columbia, has remained on the launch pad (the result of engine and heat-shield malfunctions), its costs have skyrocketed—to an estimated $14 billion.

GERALDO RIVERA: FANS AND PANS

John Weisman's "The Strange Case of Geraldo Rivera" [Dec. 6] was an excellent outline of all the reasons why I dislike Rivera's brand of "journalistic" entertainment.

Bill Haycook
Troy, Mich.

Rivera is unique in reporting because of his emotional, opinionated style. Hearing him report is like having a good friend relay events rather than reading nouns and verbs in a newspaper. If he lacks backing from some of his fellow correspondents, he certainly has no worries about his audience appeal. Thanks, Geraldo, and please continue just the way you are.

Sherry Brown
Union City, Pa.

Those who work with him may be afraid to use their names in criticizing Geraldo Rivera, but I am not. It is people like Rivera who give broadcast journalism a bad name. No wonder more and more of our viewers are questioning our integrity when they read that a major network news personality like Rivera is cheating by quoting sources out of context and deliberately editing film to make himself look good.

Dan Schillinger
Anchor-Producer
Duhamel Broadcasting Enterprises
Rapid City, S.D.

Geraldo Rivera presents facts and exposes many things the public should know. Let's see more of him.

Glenda Davis
Belton, Mo.

Regarding Rivera's 20/20 report on defective baby formula: I was watching while holding my month-and-a-half-old baby girl who was on formula only—thank God, not the bad kind. The next day I called all four supermarkets in town and told the managers about the TV report. The junk was on our shelves. I don't care who discovered the truth about the formula. Rivera must have saved countless babies from a terrible fate. More power to him.

DISENCHANTED WITH DISNEY

I was disappointed to learn in your Dec. 6 issue ["What Would Walt Disney Think?"] that the Disney studio has joined the film companies in appealing to the libertine, rather than the child, in all of us. Even more disturbing is the directors' intention to continue cashing in on the Disney image after neglecting the ideals on which that reputation was built. Let's hope the spirit of Walt returns to his studio, observes its poor condition and reanimates the place.

J. Michael Phillips
Beaumont, Texas

YOU BETCHA

For once I agree with Mr. MacKenzie (Review: You Bet Your Life, Nov. 22). The original show was successful not because of the questions, the contestants or even the duck. The success was due to the secret word. And that secret word was "Groucho."

Bruce Armstrong
Crossville, Ill.

HAVING A BALL

Loved the picture on your Nov. 29 cover. I've wanted to stuff something in Howard Cosell's mouth for a long time.

Joanne Varney
So. Glens Falls, N.Y.

OUCH—THAT HERTZ

Your article on how they filmed O.J. Simpson's Hertz commercial ["Superjuice," Nov. 22] stated that people may well be wondering, "How does he do that?" Well, what I was wondering was, what the hell was he doing in an airport if he could fly?

This Week's Movies By Judith Crist

Saturday, NBC	The Loneliest Runner
Sunday, ABC	The Shadow Box
Monday, NBC	Flamingo Road
Tuesday, CBS	The Mating Season
Tuesday, NBC	The Boys in Company C
Wednesday, CBS	Orphan Train
Friday, ABC	Birth of the Beatles

The last/first network-movie week of the old/new year runs the gamut of TV-movie concerns, beginning with bed-wetting and ending with Beatles.

The two new TV-movies on hand offer complete contrast. The Shadow Box, based by Michael Cristofer on his 1977 Pulitzer Prize-winning play, is a "class" production, the first TV-film directed by Paul Newman. It interweaves the stories of three patients spending their last days with their families in a cottage-complex for terminal cancer cases. And if it casts no new light—particularly for TV-movie watchers—on how various people face up to dying, at very least it provides opportunities for a variety of deeply affecting performances. Christopher Plummer as an intellectual, Joanne Woodward as his ex-wife, Ben Masters as his lover, James Broderick as a hard hat, Valerie Harper as his wife, and Sylvia Sidney as a spirited old woman and Melinda Dillon as her daughter are all excellent in exploring attitudes at life's end.

In contrast, The Mating Season, written by Larry Grusin and directed by John Llewellyn Moxey, is pure fluff, one of those predictable romances between a tough gal and a softhearted man, with hate at first sight and love inevitable. This one's all cutesied-up with bird watching and made palatable by pleasant performances by Lucie Arnaz as the lady lawyer, Laurence Luckinbill as the sweetheart and Swoosie Kurtz as Arnaz's pal.

The week's one prime-time theatrical premiere is of 1978's The Boys in Company C, written by Rick Natkin and Sidney J. Furie and directed by Furie. This story of U.S. Marines in Vietnam manages to encompass every war-movie cliche and stereotype of World War II flicks as well as those of the Vietnam experience; the major updating is in foul language and the drug scene. The cutting of 29 of its 125 minutes can only help. The CBS Friday late-movie offering is the premiere of 1977's The Chicken Chronicles, a tasteless "youth" movie about high-schoolers you'd never want to know, with Phil Silvers the owner of a greasy-chicken place where some of them work. Kentucky Fried he's not.

Two 1979 TV-movie repeats are first-class. Birth of the Beatles traces their histories from 1959 in Liverpool to their 1964 American debut, capturing both personalities and appeal with a fine cast and finer score. Orphan Train, a fictional account of the mid-19th-century effort of the Children's Aid Society to place destitute and abandoned New York City youngsters with families in the Midwest, is beautifully produced and its story is appealing, engrossing and touching. This year's Flamingo Road, pilot for the Jan. 6 series, is as steamy and stereotyped as the 1949 movie, with Cristina Raines a poor second to Joan Crawford's spirited gal fighting a rotten sheriff. And 1976's The Loneliest Runner, on its third run, maintains that even a teen-age bed-wetter can get to be an Olympic medalist.

In some areas network movies may not be seen on the days indicated.

TV Update

the cameras were not present.

In a related development, CBS's Mike Wallace was accused by the Israelis of paying an Arab youngster to throw a brick at a car while Wallace and a 60 Minutes crew were filming a report about Israeli Arabs. Wallace vehemently denied the charges, and later the Israelis, after investigating the incident, said they were unfounded. "But they've never said they were sorry," complains Wallace, who says that the charges were run on local radio stations and in the newspapers. "What's most incredible is that the police never talked to us. They reported that we had left the country to avoid questioning." —John Weisman

Anaheim, Cal.—Much of the talk at the recent Western Cable Television Show here concerned new program offerings. The Times Mirror Satellite Programming Co. is introducing a shop-at-home cable service that will be available in mid-1981. It will feature television personalities who pitch products and offer price information. For an annual fee, viewers will be able to call a toll-free number and order the products that have been shown on the screen.

Rockefeller Center, Inc., has organized a new pay-cable service called RCTV, Inc. Starting in 1982, it has first rights to all programs from the British Broadcasting Corp. The result may be that BBC dramas will not be available to public television until after they're seen on pay-TV. —Joseph Finnigan

Hollywood—CBS Sports has named sportscaster Brent Musburger managing editor of a new "sports journalism" effort. Musburger, who had been wooed by ABC Sports, has signed a four-year contract with CBS. Musburger will give up his pro-basketball play-by-play assignment, but will continue as anchor of The NFL Today.

GAMBLING

Special: Hugely profitable and increasingly respectable, legalized gambling is, as host David Brinkley notes, a "politically painless" way for many states to raise revenue. Nevada and Atlantic City, N.J., where casino gambling is legal, serve as backdrops for this survey on who gambles and why; and who wins and who loses.

A hotel owner calls casino gambling "an absorbing diversion." And to one high roller, the glamor and neon glitter make a Las Vegas hotel seem like a "fantasy land." But to many compulsive gamblers (who are heard during the program), being "in action" is the fantasy—and a potentially devastating one. A member of Gamblers Anonymous tells of embezzling on Wall Street to support the habit; another man speaks of running up $60,000 in casino debts because he "lost all control."

The documentary (being edited at press time) also assesses the impact of casino gaming on Atlantic City's economy; explores alleged ties between some casinos and organized crime; and visits a convict who boasts of having rigged slot machines—and stolen more than $5 million.

What leads cops to the breaking point?

We give police authority. We give police guns. But we give them no help in dealing with the very real stress and trauma they experience from exercising those powers.

THE SHADOW BOX

One of the last new TV-movies of 1980 is also one of the year's best.

But "The Shadow Box" doesn't start out that way. Indeed, the first half moves slowly and deliberately to set up what comes across as a downbeat plot: the plight of three terminally ill people adjusting to their fate with their loved ones at a special California hospice.

Yet from midpoint on, this "ABC Theatre" production achieves a haunting, emotional impact through intense confrontations. These reflections on death ironically—and sometimes wryly—reaffirm life, and are realized through fine performances, Paul Newman's sensitive direction and Michael Cristofer's faithful adaptation of his 1977 Pulitzer Prize-winning play.

Changing careers is serious business

in command

After 21 years in the Navy, Daniel Onofrey went into business for himself as an owner/operator with northAmerican Van Lines. He's happy about the change, the independence.

"I set up my own business and I run my own business. I get to make my own decisions. I don't have to work for anybody . . . I'm still excited about that. I've traveled all over the world and never did see my own country. Now I've got the chance."

An electronic technician with a large family to support, Dan made his career change carefully. "I spent nearly a year researching what company I was going to go with. What I found was that northAmerican protected, looked after, and cared for their owner/operators more than other outfits did. When I finally made my decision, I was comfortable with it . . . I'm just happy."

If you're seriously considering a change in careers, talk to us about our owner/operator program. We will train you if you need it. You must be 21 and able to invest $3,400 to $6,100 to cover the downpayment on the tractor and interim living expenses during training.

'I don't want to look macho'

Tom Selleck of 'Magnum, P.I.' may have to face up to stardom whether he likes it or not

By Arnold Hano

He looks like a star of yesterday: tall, rangy, handsome, with a Clark Gable mustache. He dresses like a star of today. At a recent business lunch he wore blue jeans and white sneakers. Naturally, he was sockless.

Do not be deceived. He looks like a star, dresses like a star and is a star, but he doesn't feel like a star. What he feels is scared.

Up to now, Tom Selleck has been, in his own words, "a pretty well-kept secret." He is both. Pretty and a well-kept secret. He may be the best-looking man in Hollywood. His green-hazel eyes crinkle when he smiles. His teeth gleam. He even has dimples. And for all his 35 years and his strapping size, he seems innocent, vulnerable. He blushes when women approach, which is what they are likely to be doing more and more, now that the secret is out. Tom Selleck is suddenly a star—so the credits insist—the title character of Magnum, P.I., a CBS-Universal private-eye series set in Hawaii.

All of which poses a problem to Selleck, a kind of midcareer crisis. After 13 years of acting, he is not exactly a household word. Now Tom Selleck must face the consequences of stardom. The world may be ready for Tom Selleck. But he's not sure he's ready for the world.

He avoids the party circuit, the chic spots. "I don't have lunch five times a week at Ma Maison. That's not my idea of fun." His idea of fun is driving around, by himself, in his Jeep. Or getting into a game of softball where nobody knows he's an actor; he's just the second baseman.

He is as unstarrish as your Aunt Clara. "We raised our children to be humble," says Tom's father, Bob Selleck. The Sellecks also raised them to be straight arrows. Bob Selleck said to each of his four children, three sons and a daughter, "If you have not smoked, drunk or sworn by the time you're 21, I'll give you a gold watch on your 21st birthday." All four young Sellecks now own gold Rolexes.

Tom Selleck is married, but he and his wife, Jacki, live apart. He has no intention of marrying again, if they ever do get a divorce. "She is my first and only wife," he says of actress/model Jacquelyn Ray Selleck. Now that he is in Hawaii, and his wife and stepson are in California, Selleck leads a semi-monastic life. "He is not a player," says Don Bellisario, executive producer of Magnum. Bellisario is an expert on Selleck.

"Let me tell you about Tom Selleck," says Bellisario. "He is the only actor I've met who lies in reverse about his height. He's 6-4 but he goes around saying he's 6-3. I know he's taller than 6-3. He's 6-4."

"No," corrects Tom Selleck soberly, "I'm 6-3½."

Whatever, it embarrasses him.

"I've grown up much taller than most people," he says. "I got in the habit of apologizing for being 6-4 and for looking a certain way. Now I've stopped." And started in again. "You don't want to go over to somebody who's 5-5 and stand extra tall and intimidate him. So you learn to accommodate shorter people and apologize."

High anxiety. It leads to acting anxiety. "I walk into a casting office and I'm kinda tall and I imagine they say to themselves, 'Who is this big dumb guy? What's he trying to do, get by →

on his appearance?' "

It all saps his confidence. When he talks about acting, he keeps qualifying his words. "Acting's real serious," he says. "I mean, I don't like to get too reverent about it. I don't think we're curing cancer. That's important to remember. We're real lucky. So I try to keep a sense of humor about it. At the same time, it's what I do, and I take a certain pride in it. I take pride in being a professional. When I'm hired for a job, I perform whatever function is required of me, to one degree or another, I hope at least acceptably."

Verbatim Selleck. Quintessential Selleck. A big man who thinks small.

Perhaps it was that humble beginning that imprinted itself on Tom Selleck's future. He was born Jan. 29, 1945, in Detroit, the second son to Bob and Martha Selleck. When Tom was 4, the family piled into its Chevy and moved to California. Bob Selleck today is a first vice president with the investment firm of Coldwell Banker.

Tom Selleck grew up in the San Fernando Valley, was captain of his high-school basketball team and a better baseball player, when he wasn't hurting. One June, when he was 16, he and two friends borrowed Tom's mother's Corvair to go bowling. Then the three drove up Mulholland Drive and over a 125-foot cliff. The worst injury suffered was a broken pelvis. Tom ended up with a brief hospital stay for assorted bruises. "We all should have been killed," says Tom.

The next June he had finally neared an apex in his life, a date with the comely Sydney Epstein, a girl Tom had coveted for two years. The afternoon of the date, Tom played a game of baseball and a thrown ball struck him in the groin. The pain and swelling were such he had to call off his date. "I still have never dated Sydney Epstein." His life is full of negatives.

He has broken his fingers in baseball, softball and basketball. He has broken his nose so often, he's lost count. Somehow he remained healthy enough to wangle a basketball scholarship at the University of Southern California. He sat on the bench and realized he'd never be a great athlete. Mickey Mantle might disagree. Mantle saw Selleck hit a few baseballs over the fence at Dedeaux Field on the campus, and he whistled. "He picked the wrong sport," said Mantle. Or, perhaps, he'd discovered another way to avoid stardom.

Still, he is an actor. Nobody forced him. In summers Tom Selleck worked for United Airlines as USC's campus rep, luring bright youngsters into the friendly skies. His dad urged him to pick up a real-estate license. But when somebody suggested he start making television commercials, without a single acting class behind him, he went out on auditions—and got hired. His first commercial was for Pepsi-Cola. "I had to stuff a basketball to win the game. Then we celebrated in the usual ecstatic sweaty locker room, chug-a-lugging Pepsis." He stuffed basketballs and his stomach all day. "I must have drunk three cases of the stuff." He adds Selleckly, "That's because I didn't do it right the first time."

Sometimes it seems so. When a deodorant introduced a new pump spray, Selleck appeared as the company spokesman, staring straight into the camera, urging all you offenders to go out and buy the product. "Sales plummeted," Tom claims, without cracking a smile.

"I am," he concludes, "famous for silly commercials and sales going down and unsold pilots."

Somebody likes him. He's made over 50 commercials. They've provided him with a steady income, $20,000 a year, $30,000 in good years. But to him it remains silly. "You do a quick scene with a woman, perhaps a romantic → scene. The director says, 'That was perfect! The kiss, everything. Now—do it exactly the same way, but make it eight-tenths of a second longer'."

It embarrasses him. "It's an unnatural business in the traditional male sense. I don't like to primp, but a certain amount is necessary."

Nothing bothers him as much as his appearance as a male model on a cigarette billboard.

"They plastered my face all over the country. They gave me blue eyes. I got a day's pay and the billboard was up four years. They sent me an additional bonus of $500, so I ended up with $850. The company spent millions buying space. That's not equitable. I feel they ripped me off."

Producers began to notice him. He was a guest on TV dramas, he appeared in a few films; he made unsuccessful pilots, he spent a year and a half in a soap, The Young and the Restless. Some moments are not easily forgotten. He played a very square, very ingenuous private eye in a Rockford Files episode; people liked him so much, Steve Cannell wrote a second episode. Whereupon CBS and Universal decided to find a project for Selleck. They dredged up an old script, Magnum, about a private eye in Hawaii, and showed it to Selleck. CBS's hugely successful Hawaii Five-0 was going off the air after 12 seasons; the networks and nature abhor a vacuum.

Magnum turned out to be a story about a macho James Bond-type character. Says a CBS executive, "It was a good pilot, but not a Tom Selleck pilot. It was an 007 pilot, a Bob Conrad pilot, very macho. The hero would snap his fingers and the next girl would show up."

"It wasn't bad," says Tom Selleck, "but it wasn't what I wanted." Selleck wanted a hero in his own image. "I wanted the guy to make mistakes, to have flaws." Don Bellisario was called in to do a new version, which Selleck liked immensely. Selleck and Bellisario get along well. Selleck says to his boss, "I don't always have to get the girl. And I don't want to look macho."

Still, it's hard to make Tom Selleck look anything but. At a press conference after the pilot was screened, a woman writer asked bluntly: "How does it feel to be exploited, the way women have been for years?"

Selleck, naturally, blushed. Nor was he sure what the woman meant.

"Come on," she said. "You run around with your shirt off a lot."

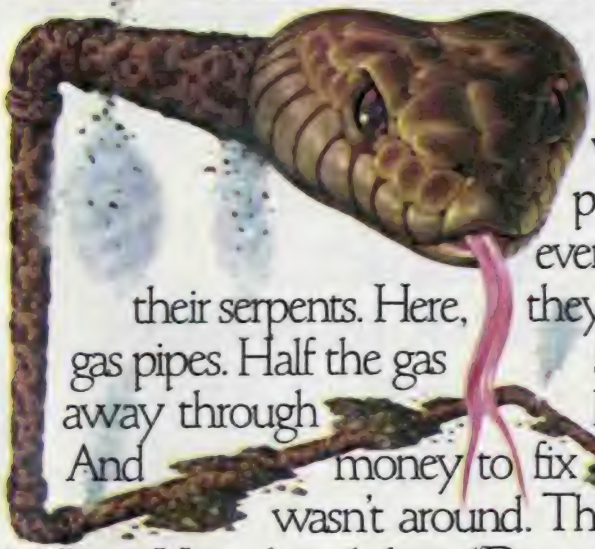
Nettled, Selleck said quietly, "I run around with it off twice when I go swimming. I don't like swimming with my shirt on."

The notion of machismo amuses him, bemuses him. "As a kid I went rabbit hunting. Which was sad. We'd shoot the rabbits and leave them there. I hated that. I might go hunting today, if I ate what I shot. Though I could never shoot a deer. Those big eyes. I shot a bird once when I was 10 years old. I had a BB gun. I set out some bread crumbs and then I lay in ambush. I lay there all day, and I missed them all day. I was walking into the house when one bird flew overhead and I turned and shot. He landed on the roof. He didn't die like in the movies. He kept flapping his wings—full of blood. It was awful—I cried."

Life is less sad these days. Success beckons. Actor Bob Conrad saw the Magnum pilot at a private screening. He said to Bellisario, "I was prepared to be polite and tell you I enjoyed it and walk away, but actually I was floored. You've got a hit show. And you've got a star."

Tom Selleck is pleased and apprehensive. "With this show, even if it's not successful, even if it goes only 13 weeks, my life is going to change. It comes with the territory." END

The pipes of Hatfield hiss no more.

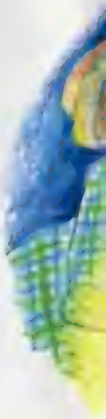


For many, Hatfield was an Arkansas version of paradise, population 433. But even little Edens have their serpents. Here, they were the town's gas pipes. Half the gas supply was hissing away through leaks underground. And money to fix things right wasn't around. Then Mayor Milburn Hines heard about "Driscopipe." Corrosion-resistant plastic pipe developed by Phillips Petroleum. This pipe could fit in his budget. And, with some advice from Phillips, local townsmen could install the new pipe themselves. Which they did. Saved enough gas the first year to pay for everything. And now hisses in Hatfield are saved for villains in school plays. Phillips Petroleum. Good things for cars and the people who drive them. The Performance Company

The man with the infallible plot machine

A Hollywood fable about Herbie the writer, who was always willing to make a few small changes

By Haskell Barkin



"Lunch. You have to come to the house for lunch. OK? See you soon?"

That was my friend Herbie, the television writer, calling me a few months ago. At least he was a TV writer then, before the events I'm about to relate.

When Herbie had just finished a script or received a residual check, we would eat at a French restaurant in his neighborhood. Two shows in a row and it was his treat.

But on this day, as I said, we were to eat at his house, where he worked. He sounded especially harried on the phone. "Bring some sourdough to go with the omelets. And two eggs."

"Hard times, Herbie?"

"Yech."

His expression, as he opened his front door, was something only a Kafka could love. "This morning they showed me the pilot for a new series."

"Why the gloom? Doesn't that mean they want you to write for them?"

"Me and the other nine writers in the room. And at 10 other screenings this week."

"So you still have one chance in five, don't you? They make, what, twenty-something shows?"

I heard a crunching sound. Herbie's fist had clenched around the eggs I'd presented to him.

"Hah," he said, dripping scorn. And egg. "On a new series today they'll order 13 scripts maximum. It gives the networks flexibility to cancel if it's a bomb. Order 13 and produce six. Next year they'll order six, produce three. Then three and one. The trend is clear."

"I see why you're depressed."

"That's not why I'm depressed. After the screening, the series' producer gave us the usual pep talk. 'I want you to know the network is very high on this show,' he told us. 'So we want fresh stories, areas you couldn't touch 10 years ago.'

"He worked us up to a fever pitch of greed. We all began scrambling out, to be the first ones to come back and pitch those great ideas. 'Hold it,' he said. 'Just one more little thing. The network has suggested a few small changes. So this pilot doesn't exactly represent the way the series will go.'

"It turned out," Herbie went on, "that only one of the five characters in the pilot would remain. A 17-year-old kid who appeared for two flicks of a gnat's eye. The network didn't feel any of the other characters worked."

"A boy or a girl?"

"The network hadn't felt its way into that yet. It also didn't feel the original locale worked, so the show may not be in a mountain community any more. The network is also rethinking whether comedy-suspense is the way to go, rather than action-adventure. Although it hasn't ruled out sci-fi-soap.

" 'But it's going to be a very special series, breaking new ground just like

All in the Family'," Herbie said, using his producer imitation. " 'Now get back to us with those wonderful ideas!' "

He chug-a-lugged his second can of beer. "So here I am," he said, "busily coming up with stories for unknown characters of indeterminate sex, who live in a small town, the big city or maybe another planet, whose lives are either funny, soapy or deeply involved in crashing automobiles."

"Why don't you wait until the network makes up its mind?"

"What, and give up show biz?"

"How can you know what stories to pitch?" But Herbie was looking past me now, lost in sad musings.

"The perfect system. For 10 years I've had an infallible plot machine. And now they have to toss another wild card into the game."

"What perfect system, Herbie?"

He snapped back to alertness.

"Perfect system? Did I say that?"

He began nervously fingering the key suspended from the thin gold chain around his neck. I had never seen him without it. He motioned me to follow him. In his office he took the key from around his neck and unlocked a desk drawer next to his battered old typewriter. He extracted a small, dogeared paperback book and extended it to me reverentially on the palm of his hand. "I have never shown this to another soul." I read the title. "TV Movies. A Viewers' Guide to Films Appearing on Television, 1970 Edition."

It contained one-paragraph summaries of thousands of movies.

"What's the first listing?" Herbie said, seeing my confusion.

" 'Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick'."

"My first television sale years ago was based on that. My second was taken from the second listing."

" 'Abandon Ship!' with Tyrone Power and Mai Zetterling?"

"In the years since, I have simply worked my way through the book. They don't all sell, of course, but I just move on to the next one."

I flipped the pages. Each movie summary beginning with "A" had a red line slashed across it. Ditto for the "B's" and so on, until something called "Kiss of Fire."

"This is the next story you'll pitch? 'Kiss of Fire'?"

"If that's what the book says."

"Always in sequence?"

"Why deviate?"

"Suppose the plot doesn't fit."

"I have ways of making it fit." His teeth clenched. "Provided they let me know what the series is about."

It was nearly two months before I heard again from my friend Herbie the television writer. "Can you make lunch?" he asked on the phone. "Ma Grippe. 12:30? My treat." →

continued

"Sounds like things are looking up."

"Can't say yet," he said. His voice had the suggestion of a tremor, the kind that tells you someone is not as young as he used to be.

"I'll be there, Herbie. I want to hear how things worked out with that series you were trying to pitch to."

He answered in a voice tinged with husky paranoia, as if he were looking over his shoulder. "The fact is, they made me the producer."

The waiter led me to a table where Herbie was trying to flick the bubbles off his Perrier. He had aged.

"Herbie, what's going on? Six weeks ago you were an outsider trying to figure out what the show was about. Today you're running the operation."

"I'm not running it. I'm just the producer. Over me there's an executive producer. Over him is the network. And if you think what they're doing can be called 'running it' . . ."

"How'd it happen?"

"I pitched half a dozen ideas to the story editor. 'Kiss of Fire.' 'Kiss the Blood off My Hands.' 'Kiss the Boys Goodbye.' 'Kiss the Other Sheik'."

"'Kiss the Other'—you made that up."

"I never make anything up. Don't you ever accuse me of that! 'Kiss the Other Sheik' was a 1968 Italian-French coproduction, and the story editor loved it. So I did an outline. The story editor told me to make a few changes so he could buck it up to the producer. I did, and he did, and the producer loved it. And if I would make just a couple of changes he would let the executive producer see it."

"And you did?"

"The executive producer called it the greatest thing I'd done since he was a story editor for Gilligan's Island and I sold him 'Gone with the Wind'."

"You proceeded to write the script?"

"Only after the network agreed that the outline was magnificent. Provided."

"A couple of small changes?"

"You have a quick mind. So I finally delivered the script and sat back waiting for my marching orders. Two weeks, three weeks. I hear nothing. Then the executive producer calls."

"Rewrite?"

"Nope. They handled all that themselves. It turned out so great, they were opening the season with my script, they were firing the story editor and did I want the job."

"How long did that last?"

"Until the executive producer fired the producer. Artistic disagreements. One of them thought the series was a comedy, the other thought it was action-adventure. So they kicked me up to producer."

"What is the show, anyway?"

"Beats the hell out of me."

"You don't know?"

"Executive producer won't tell me."

"Why not?"

"Because then I'll know as much as he does. The network might find that out; then I'd be executive producer."

"Does the network know what the show is about?"

"I think. But they make us guess."

"But, Herbie, how can you tell writers what you want from them?"

"Writers?" he screamed. "What do writers have to know?"

"But when you were a writer—"

"When I was a child I spoke as a child!" Herbie leaned across the table and spoke more quietly. "Listen, I'm producer because I gave them such a great script, right? Well, you know how many lines of mine were left in the final draft?"

"How many, Herbie?"

"Three. And that was the script that got me a personal call of congratulations from the network. From the executive producer. From the former producer."

"Didn't they know?"

"I should hope so. They all had a hand in rewriting it. It's a funny business." Herbie signaled the waiter. "Refills. And more peanuts, please." END

MEMORANDUM

TO:

President Reagan's Press Secretary

FROM: Ron Nessen

SUBJECT: How to survive the White House Press Office with your integrity, sense of humor and sanity intact

First, I suppose I should welcome you to The Club of Presidential Press Secretaries, which Bill Moyers, one of Lyndon Johnson's press secretaries, once described as "a very small, battered, bruised and neurotic band."

Assuming you would reject my advice that you pass up being press secretary in favor of an ambassadorial appointment to Sierra Leone, here are some suggestions:

☐ Enjoy the honeymoon while you can: it ain't gonna last long. Even in these post-Watergate years of aggressive and skeptical investigative reporting, the White House press corps gives every new President and his press secretary a honeymoon period of relatively uncritical coverage. I call this the "English muffin" phase. You will find eager customers for every press release and TV-picture opportunity on the eating, sleeping, drinking, reading and leisure-time activities of President Reagan, his senior staff and his relatives unto the third and fourth generations. Don't be lulled. The soft questions-about what kind of juice the President had for breakfast will give way soon enough to hard questions about what he's doing to cure inflation. The honeymoon will be short. The last time we changed Presidents, one network news star told his viewers, "Mr. Carter's press staff no longer has much credibility." That was a week before Mr. Carter was sworn in!

Ron Nessen served as press secretary to President Gerald R. Ford.

☐ Don't lie. Ever. The most precious commodity you have at the beginning of a new administration is credibility with the TV correspondents and print reporters who cover the White House. Don't lose it. If they stop believing you, you might as well quit, because you will no longer be able to serve as the trusted conduit of information between the President and the American people. There is a more practical reason not to lie. You will surely get caught. Then the fact that you lied, tried to cover up something, will be a bigger, more damaging story on the evening news than whatever it was you were trying to hide.

☐ First, last and always, your function is to reflect accurately the President's view. According to another one of your predecessors, George Reedy, the White House press secretary has only two real functions: speaking for the President when asked to do so, and handling hotel reservations, credentials and airline charters for reporters and TV crews on Presidential trips. Well, yes, you will be burdened by a lot of travel-agent duties on behalf of the press corps, who will sometimes judge the efficiency of the Reagan White House on the basis of how efficiently suitcases are delivered to hotel rooms on the road. But your primary function will be to act as the public voice of President Reagan, his surrogate, virtually his alter ego on television and in print. The much respected former Washington Post White House correspondent Carroll Kilpatrick once referred to this function as the "imperial front man." Your chief responsibility is to report what the President is thinking, what he has decided to do about this or that situation and why he has decided to do it. If you can do that with a high degree of accuracy, you will be fulfilling your major obligation to President Reagan, to the White House press corps and to the American public.

☐ If you treat TV correspondents and print reporters like the enemy, they will be the enemy. Even in the age of adversary journalism, the White House and the White House press corps have the same ultimate goal: to inform the American public about what the President is doing. Since the White House has the information and the pictures, and the TV networks have the cameras and transmitters, they need each other and should be able to cooperate in the interest of the public good. As Herbert G. Klein, Richard Nixon's director of communications, says, "If both sides accept the fact that, while professional goals differ, both are dependent upon public understanding, war between the President and the press need not be inevitable." Sure, there are going to be plenty of TV news stories you don't like. On occasion you and the President will be misquoted, misunderstood, taken out of context, oversimplified, ignored. Don't react by retreating into the bunker or by attacking the press. That will only exacerbate a "we vs. them" war.

☐ Let President Reagan speak for himself. The new President is a knowledgeable and likable person. That's one reason he won the election. Make use of his likableness by letting the TV audience see him often. It's the best way to transmit his ideas directly to the public and to rally public support for his leadership. President Reagan is better on television than any President since John Kennedy. Use his ability to educate, direct and inspire the Nation. Besides, the more the President is on TV, the easier your job will be. Correspondents get testy and hostile when weeks or months pass without an opportunity to ask the President a question directly. They take out that testiness on the press secretary. Stick to a regular schedule of televised Presidential news conferences—perhaps once every two weeks—before questions, suspicions and political opposition have a chance to build up.

☐ Don't screw up on a slow news day. Little gaffes and minor controversies at the White House get magnified into the big story of the day when nothing much is happening to fill up the evening news.

☐ Don't let it get you down. That will probably be the hardest rule to follow. As an earlier occupant of your office, Pierre Salinger, has grumbled, "Competence and humor are no longer sufficient to deal with the job. You need a hide of steel." Maybe. But it seems to me that the intense hostility directed toward previous press secretaries from the White House press corps as a result of the Vietnam War and Watergate and the pardon of President Nixon has faded. It's not exactly the dawn of a new era of friendly fellowship. But I sense a lessening of the inclination to make the press secretary a punching bag.

Therefore, you have an opportunity to restore mutual civility and respect to the important task of transmitting information about their President to the American people. If you can accomplish that, history—and future members of the Club—will thank you.

Good luck. (END)
